

STRANGE ACCIDENT.

A Man in Hurst Asunder from Falling Down on a... Yesterday a woman called at the house of Alderman Stowater, at Coleman's siding, on the Allegheny Valley Railroad, in the Twenty-first ward, and told the Alderman that her husband, in going to work, had discovered an unknown man lying partially in shadow's run, apparently dead. The Alderman at once started out, and going to the place had the man removed to his (the Alderman's) dwelling. In half an hour afterwards a train came down, and the man was put upon it and brought to the city. He was found to have been very dangerously injured. The blood was oozing from his nose and ears, his pantaloons were frozen tightly about his legs below the knees, and his abdomen had been burst open so as to permit the escape of a portion of the entrails. He was not altogether unconscious, but his mind was so confused that he could not talk coherently on any subject. He was heard to say "Gottlieb Lau" and "Connellhouse" two or three times, and the supposition is that he was endeavoring to tell his name and place of residence. He was found at the foot of a steep hill, upon which is Coleman's incline railway, some five hundred feet in height. The impression is that he has been on the hill, attempted to descend the incline, and in doing so missed his footing and rolled to the bottom. The bursting of his abdomen would thus be accounted for, and his inability to help himself out of the water. He must have fallen a considerable distance, as his hat could nowhere be found. The Alderman conveyed the injured man to the Homeopathic Hospital, where Dr. Clark's examination was, in addition to the injuries already described, both hands and feet had been frozen. The physicians thought they could remove the freezing successfully, but the injury to the abdomen was very serious, and might terminate fatally.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

"The Bohemian Girl" by the English Opera... Last evening an unusually large and brilliant audience assembled at the Academy of Music, to witness the first performance of a short season of English opera. There was scarcely a vacant seat in the immense building, and the enthusiasm of the audience was fairly proportionate to its size. Balfe's melodious opera of "The Bohemian Girl," which Philadelphia audiences seem never to tire, was presented in admirable style. Indeed, it has seldom been performed more satisfactorily. Mr. Bowler is no good as "Thaddeus" as Mr. Castle, nor is Miss Rose Hersee quite as good in "Arlene" as Mrs. Bernard, but they were both satisfactory last evening. Miss Hersee, indeed, sang charmingly, and Mr. Bowler appeared to better advantage than usual. He is still overly robust in times, but his manner has been toned down in a perceptible degree, and in singing "The Fair Land of Poland" he was especially effective. Mr. Campbell's "Count Arnhelm" is so well known that it is only necessary to say that it was quite as good as usual. Mr. Seguin's "Devilshoof" is a fine piece of buff singing and acting, but we would advise him to return to the old joke about "Paradise Lost; I'm glad I've found it." Miss Fannie Goodwin, who appeared as the "Gipsy Queen," shows marked improvement, and is gradually giving her part the prominence that it merits. Between the second and third acts, a short concert programme was introduced, and with general satisfaction. Mr. Drayton sang, with excellent dramatic effect, "The Wolf," by Shilke, and Miss Jennie Von Busk was introduced to a Philadelphia audience in a difficult "Nightingale" trill. Her execution of this was admirable, although her voice is far from being a strong one. But what it lacks in strength is fully compensated for by its smoothness and clearness. Then followed the sensation of the evening, a medley on the violin by a pretty little bit of humanity styled "Americus." It is to be regretted that the management have lapsed into the circus style in naming this "infant phenomenon," instead of giving his true cognomen. He is enough of an artist to appear on the bills in a more dignified way. The child is barely able to hold a diminutive violin in his infantile hands, but he handles it most admirably for one so young, and plays with method, grace, and ease. He was three times encoored, and during his performance went from grave to gay, from lively to severe, with a composure that was in itself worth witnessing. The house was taken by storm, and the little fellow made a determined effort to merit the applause he received, an effort in which he was fairly successful. He is announced to appear again this evening, having volunteered for the benefit of Messrs. Zimmerman and Campbell.

"The Old Man of the Mountain" at the Chesnut... The bold crusaders "fit into" the Saracens in fine old-fashioned style last night at the Chesnut, to the immense delight of at least a very large proportion of a very large audience. The crusaders indulged in considerable tall talking that would not have discredited the traditional Mississippi flatboatmen, but they also did some hard fighting when matters came to a climax between them and "the Old Man of the Mountain," "Saladin," and the other infidels, and the walls of Jerusalem were carried in really gallant style. There were also some love passages between "Bohemond," the King of Jerusalem, and "Almea," a lovely Saracen, who, as far as we were able to make out, was the niece or daughter or some near relative of that terrible old fellow, "the Old Man of the Mountain." "Almea" nobly saved the life of "Bohemond" when he was about to perish by the dagger of one of the assassins in the employ of the "Old Man," but—as, according to our reading of history and romance, it always happened to these fair Saracens—she was deserted by "Bohemond" for a Christian maiden. "Almea," unable to bear this wrong in a sufficiently philosophical spirit, becomes a Christian and retires to a convent. Perhaps Mr. Foster, the author of the drama, had historical authority for this, but, to our fancy, it was a rather tame ending of "Almea's" career, when she might as well have slain herself at the feet of her recreant lover, and thus secured an additional round of applause from the galleries. In addition to the above there was also a comic love episode in which a Christian maiden was pursued by some dozen or two of admirers, one of whom, "Gogo," chief cook, farrier, blacksmith, and man-of-all-work for the Christian army, furnished a large proportion of the fun of the piece. As a piece of dramatic construction, "The Old Man of the Mountain" is far from perfect, and it is rather difficult at times for the spectator to keep the thread of the argument; but as a purely spectacular drama it has considerable merit, as it affords excellent opportunities for fine scenic effects, splendid dresses, and gorgeous appointments. It is from this point of view, of course, that it is to be judged, and as a spectacle "The Old Man of the Mountain" has many attractions that will entitle it to the attention of the play-going public. It has been placed upon the stage in very liberal style, the scenery, dresses, and spectacular appointments being remarkably rich and elegant. Last night there were some inequalities, both in the performance and in the working of the scenery, such as are to be expected at a first representation, but hereafter these will be remedied, and the piece will progress as smoothly as could be desired. With the exception that some of the actors required the assistance of the prompter rather frequently, the leading parts were well-assisted, Mr. Nagle rather carrying off the honors by a vigorous and melodramatic personation of "The Old Man of the Mountain." Mr. Thorne made a spirited representative of "Bohemond," and Miss Glover a sufficiently lovely "Almea." Mr. Lennox as "Gogo," the comic farrier, sustained his reputation as an excellent performer in this line of business. "The Old Man of the Mountain" is undeniably a very handsome spectacle, and it deserves to have an extended run. The chief difficulty it labors under is a lack of stage-room, the stage of the Chesnut being too narrow to enable elaborate scenic effects to be given in the most approved style. The piece, however, was heartily applauded last evening, and as there has been nothing in the spectacular line produced here for some time, it will doubtless prove a brilliant success.

The City Amusements. AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC Martha will be performed this evening for the benefit of Mr. J. F. Zimmerman, treasurer of the English Opera Troupe, and Mr. C. W. Campbell, book-keeper of the Academy.

AT THE CHESNUT the spectacular drama of "The Old Man of the Mountain" will be repeated this evening.

AT THE WALNUT Mr. J. S. Clarke will appear this evening as "Ass Tranchard" in "Our American Cousin," and as "Young Gosling" in "Foz and Goose." This is the most successful engagement Mr. Clark has ever had in this city, and parties desiring to witness his performance must secure seats at least three days in advance.

The house is nightly filled to overflowing. To-morrow there will be a matinee performance for the benefit of Mr. J. D. Stockton, the author of "Foz and Goose," when that comedy and the farce of "The Rough Diamond" will be performed, with Mr. Clarke in both pieces.

AT THE AMERICAN an attractive variety entertainment is announced for this evening.

AT THE MUSEUM, Ninth and Arch streets, a dramatic performance will be given this evening. A matinee to-morrow.

THEODORE THOMAS and his grand orchestra will give two concerts at the Academy of Music on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, February 10th and 11th.

They are issued for the sole purpose of building the extension from MILTON to WILKESBARRE, a distance of 30 miles, and are secured by a lien on the entire road of nearly 100 miles, fully equipped and doing a flourishing business.

When it is considered that the entire indebtedness of the company will be less than $4,000 per mile, leaving out their Floating Debt Property of 1869 series, it will be seen at once what an unusual amount of security is attached to these bonds, and they therefore most confidently recommend them to the most prudent investors. An additional advantage is that they can be converted, at the option of the holder, after 15 years, into the Preferred Stock, at par.

They are registered Coupon Bonds (a great safeguard), issued in sums of $500 and $1000. Interest payable February and August. Advance 2 1/2% and accrued interest, leaving a good margin for advance.
